RemoveIE Product Key proposes a simple workaround: by detecting and uninstalling the Windows Update responsible for the Internet Explorer installation. By resolving the root of the problem, you won't have to worry about Microsoft installing Internet Explorer again (as long as you don't reinstall that particular system update). This app is also practical if you want to install older version of Internet Explorer, since this cannot be done when there's a newer version detected on the PC. If you want to uninstall Internet Explorer 10, the application find and removes the KB2718695 update. For Internet Explorer 11, it looks for KB2841134. The web browser is automatically removed when the Windows Update is uninstalled. To complete the process, the program recommends rebooting the computer. It only detects the Internet Explorer updates (Microsoft would like to install the last one) and removes them from the computer. About Internet Explorer Internet Explorer is one of Microsoft's line of web browsers. In 2016, Microsoft announced that it will be stopping the development of Windows 10 running on devices powered by ARM architecture, thus making Internet Explorer for these devices obsolete. Starting in February 2019, the operating systems will no longer automatically update. Using the Internet Explorer version that you have should be enough to ensure that your current browser and the rest of the web features will work, although the app will also help you remove Internet Explorer 10 and later. Why does it matter? If you are using a web browser, and you know that one of its updates has caused incompatibility issues with other parts of the operating system, you should definitely uninstall Internet Explorer. With that in mind, the next version of the operating system could come with Internet Explorer as standard. You wouldn't be able to uninstall it without realizing and then being affected, which can be a huge inconvenience. It may be also not know how to remove Internet Explorer on the
